

The Guinn Family history in the Bow Valley begins in the 1930s when Boundary Ranch owner, Rick Guinn, first established Rafter Six Ranch where it began operating as a trail guiding service.

The Guinn Legacy began when Alvin Guinn rounded up wild horses in what is now known as the Kananaskis Range of the Canadian Rocky Mountains. He gathered the wild horses on the present day site of Boundary Ranch. Today, the original corral still stands on the property, in its original resting place.

Boundary Ranch was established in 1987 as Kananaskis Country was in the early stage of development. The name Boundary Ranch was chosen because the location is on the boundary line between the previous Provincial Forestry area and the original Federal Forestry Experimental Station.

With over 85 years of experience in mountain horseback riding and guiding in the Canadian Rocky Mountains, we will ensure your valuable holiday time will be a safe, authentic and memorable experience for you to treasure forever.

"This place is SO gorgeous! What a beautiful ranch. The cowgirls were so friendly and efficient. I took my 6yr old daughter, and Chloe rode behind her telling us about stuff the entire time, making her feel very relaxed with lots of positive reinforcement and witty comments. She was so great. This is an awesome place, the staff are super friendly and the horses are happy and healthy." BM, Google Review
